With an "always on" connection you will be assign an IP, which makes it easier for an attacker to find you. Firewalls (software or hardware) protect your computer by reading incoming data. Software firewalls run off your operating system (some available for free) allow you to give authorization to requests being made from outside sources. Hardware firewalls are independent of computer operating systems and resources, are able to connect to more than one computer at a time and are generally more reliable.*
